One of the Lucky Ones: Getting out of Domestic Violence with Your Life with Guest Amanda Lee

Amanda shares her experience of falling in love with her abuser and getting married even when her gut was telling her to get out. She shares the extreme amount of shame she felt when thinking of telling her family that her relationship was not as wonderful as she made it out to be and that things were getting worse. An extreme threat of violence to her and her children allowed her to break her silence and force past that shame in order to be "one of the lucky ones."

A Collection of Poems

I hate writing poetry – dread it, actually. And then, all of the sudden, while on a train to New York City, something magical happened: I wrote a poem for a dear friend's wedding. It just came to me, and I started typing. I loved it instantly, and, when I eventually gave it to her she did too.
